Dr. Arnt Fløysand is a professor of Human Geography at the University of Bergen. His research interests center on knowledge-network-capital dynamism that he investigates by combining theories and concepts from economic geography, cultural geography and political-ecological geography. In dealing with this he has been publishing on globalization; innovation; foreign direct investment and natural resource management. Recently, he has been concerned with regional development and flows of capital; discourses; and local narratives among multi-nested stakeholders within the salmon farming sector in Chile.
